"Stairway to Heaven," at Susan Inglett Gallery, 522 West 24th Street, through July 24, opening Wednesday, June 9, 6–8 p.m.

"The last page in the book of modernism seemed to have been printed," artist Matt Mullican says in the press release. "So we went into the mirror and found a lot of loose ends." What he and weirdo Southern California compatriots Paul McMahan and James Welling, who round out this show of work dating from 1970 to 1976, discovered was a manic, mannered style of performance, drawing, and photography that continues to serve up source material to contemporary artists today.
